Chapter 1: What Is Art?

Why did the Performance Artist stare at frozen orange juice can for 2 hours?

Check out the answer here:

LAMB AND SWEET POTATO CURRY

CONTENT

INGREDIENTS

8 green cardamom pods
1 tbsp sunflower oil
500g boneless shoulder or leg of lamb, cut into 2-3cm cubes, trimmed of fat
1 onion, peeled and sliced
4 garlic cloves, peeled and finely chopped
1 tsp root ginger, peeled and finely chopped
2 tsp ground coriander
2 tsp ground cumin
1/4 tsp turmeric
1/2 tsp cayenne pepper
500 ml chicken stock
1 sweet potato, peeled and cut into 2cm cubes
75 ml natural yogurt
handful chopped coriander, to serve!

METHOD

1. To extract the cardamom seeds from the pods, place the pods on a chopping board, lay the flat side of a large knife over the top and press down to lightly crush. Remove the seeds, discarding the pods, and set aside.
2. Pour the sunflower oil into a large casserole dish or saucepan with a lid. Place the pan on a high heat, then season the lamb with salt and pepper and place in the hot oil.
3. Sauté the lamb pieces, stirring frequently, for 5 minutes or until the meat is browned all over. Remove the meat with a slotted spoon, leaving any oil behind, and set aside on a plate.
4. Add a little extra sunflower oil to the dish or pan if necessary, then reduce the heat to medium and add the onion, garlic and ginger. Cook, stirring occasionally, for 6-8 minutes or until the onion is soft and golden.
5. Stir in the coriander, cardamom and cumin, turmeric and cayenne pepper and add the reserved lamb.
6. Stir together for a further minute then pour in the stock and season with salt and pepper. Bring to the boil then reduce to a low heat. Cover with a lid and simmer for 45 minutes to 1 hour, stirring occasionally, until the lamb is almost tender.
7. Next, tip in the sweet potato and cook for another 30 minutes or until the potato is soft. If you would like a thicker sauce, then remove the lid and cook, uncovered, for a further 10 minutes. Remove from the heat, stir in the yoghurt and serve with a sprinkling of fresh coriander and naan bread.

MIRACLE HERON HORRORORROR

There was this artist who worked from a studio in his home. He specialized in nudes, and had been working on what he thought would be a masterpiece for several months now.

His model showed up and, after exchanging the usual greetings and small talk, she began to undress for the day's work. He told her not to bother, since he felt pretty bad with a cold he had been fighting. He added that he would pay her for the day, but that she could just go home; he just wanted some hot tea and then, off to bed.

The model said, "Oh, please, let me fix it for you. It's the least I can do." He agreed and told her to fix herself a cup too.

They were sitting in the living room exchanging small talk and enjoying their tea, when he heard the front door open and close, then some familiar footsteps. "Oh my God!" he whispered loudly, "It's my wife! Quick! Take all your clothes off!"

An artist asked the gallery owner if there had been any interest in his paintings on display at that time. "I have good news and bad news," the owner replied. "The good news is that a gentleman inquired about your work and wondered if it would appreciate in value after your death. When I told him it would, he bought all 15 of your paintings." "That's wonderful," the artist exclaimed. "What's the bad news?" "The guy was your doctor."

The Rolling Stones where playing in a suburb of Phoenix, about a two hour drive from here. Left home at 3:30. First band plays at 7:30. I wanted to get there early to look for some doses in the parking lots.

Beautiful, sunny Sunday afternoon drive. Drinking about four ounces of vodka (screwdriver) and smoked several bowls on the way there, alone. Beautiful sunset over the desert/mountains.

I arrived at the parking lot at 5:30. It was dark and quiet. Turns out everyone was experiencing the pre-show in the arena. My first time at this venue.

Bought a double screwdriver ($16 plus $2 tip) and spaced around the arena venders but it stunk so much like fried meat I decided to pick up the vibe of the ambient music and watch the arena fill up. Must have been 10,000 people when the Stones went on.

I learned my lesson about taking the dose too early so this time I waited for the first band to finish playing, went to get another drink and took about 1.25 pieces of blotter left over from the summer (got ripped off of $400 on the deal so it was like a $50 dose!)

Ran back to my aisle seat on the arena floor (row 27) -- lots of room to dance!

I never felt the acid kick in. Perfect timing because the Stones started playing about the time the acid would begin its effects.

All I can say is I danced like crazy. Had no conversations with anyone.

things are exactly what they seem.

For theatre, the dress rehearsal is a full-scale rehearsal where performers work out every detail of the performance. Cast members wear their costumes, and the backdrop may be used with props. For a musical performance, the dress rehearsal is the final rehearsal before the performance.

A tiny but dignified old lady was among a group looking at an art exhibition in a newly opened gallery. Suddenly one contemporary painting caught her eye. "What on earth," she inquired of the artist standing nearby, "is that?" He smiled condescendingly. "That, my dear lady, is supposed to be a mother and her child." "Well, then," snapped the little old lady, "why isn't it?"

PRACTICE

The Art Institute is a company of performers that may include clowns, painters, acrobats, trained animals, conceptual artists, trapeze acts, musicians, hoopers, dadaists, tightrope walkers, jugglers, unicyclists and other object manipulation and stunt-oriented artists. The Art Institute has been credited with reviving the Art tradition since the 1880s when a number of groups introduced Art based almost solely on innovative human conditions and which drew from other performing art skills and styles. The Art Institute perform in a variety of venues including tents, theatres, galleries, banks and casinos. Many Art performances are still held in a white cube usually 13 m (42 ft) in diameter. This dimension was adopted by Saatchi in the late 19th century as the minimum diameter that enabled acrobatic artistic painters to stand upright on a cantering horse to perform their tricks.

THE COLLECTION OF D.D.P

It will make you a smarter, happier, more interesting person.

I realize an empty apartment, a bag of new hardcovers and a cold bottle of Sauvignon Blanc isn't everyone's idea of the perfect Friday night. So for those of you who don't think reading is more fun than hanging around some loud, crowded bar, I've compiled a list of foolproof reasons why you need to start reading more, like, yesterday. And for my fellow book nerds who need no convincing? Now you have more ammunition for next time your friends try to drag you out of your house before you're done with The Goldfinch.

1. It makes you more empathetic.

This is the most important reason of all. In his now-famous Kenyon College commencement address, David Foster Wallace argues that a liberal arts education, the foundation of which requires reading a lot of literature, makes you a kinder, more empathetic person.

When you read, you replace your own life with someone else's. That is an act of empathy, and empathy is the cornerstone of human connection. Empathy will make you a better friend, a better lover, a better employee, a better sister, a better child — it will make you a better everything.

My favorite quote from DFW's speech demonstrates this point: "But most days, if you're aware enough to give yourself a choice, you can choose to look differently at this fat, dead-eyed, over-made-up lady who just screamed at her kid in the checkout line. Maybe she's not usually like this. Maybe she's been up three straight nights holding the hand of a husband who is dying of bone cancer. Or maybe this very lady is the low-wage clerk at the motor vehicle department, who just yesterday helped your spouse resolve a horrific, infuriating, red-tape problem through some small act of bureaucratic kindness ... if you really learn how to pay attention, you will know there are other options. It will actually be within your power to experience a crowded, hot, slow, consumer-hell type situation as not only meaningful, but sacred, on fire with the same force that made the stars: love, fellowship, the mystical oneness of all things deep down."

Here's full-text of DFW's speech. Try not to cry.

2. Books force you to concentrate.

Sometimes, after a slow day at the office, I find myself suffering from Internet brain. I ping-pong from site to site, refreshing my Twitter and Facebook feeds, desperate for the tiny endorphin hit of a funny status or a retweet. After too many hours online, my brain gets almost itchy — probably from spending so much time with my attention scattered in a million different places. The perfect antidote? Curling up with a book. It can be a little hard to focus your mind at first, but once you get sucked in, I promise that itchy feeling will fade away. There is nothing passive about reading, even if you're in pajamas on the couch while you're turning those pages. Every sentence is like a push-up for your brain.

3. It will make you more fun to talk to.

I was once at a dinner party where everyone was complaining about how they can't remember anything anymore because the Internet makes our brains so goddamn itchy. My friend, a prolific nonfiction reader, chimed in, but instead of adding another story about how she forgot to feed her cat or left her phone in a cab, she told the table about a book she was reading by Joshua Foer, called Moonwalking With Einstein. In the book, Foer describes how he became the memory champion of the United States by creating imaginary memory-palaces where he "stored" his memories. Her anecdote, which was about 4 million times more interesting than our communal bitch-fest, transformed the conversation into an epic version of that I'm-going-on-a-picnic memory game we all used to play on childhood road trips. The more you read and the more widely you read, the more you'll be surprised how much you have to say (and how much people want to listen).

4. It improves your spelling, grammar, and vocabulary.

Is anything a bigger turnoff than someone who can't spell? Last weekend my hairdresser had me howling with horrified laughter when she showed me a barrage of texts from a guy trying to woo her — a guy who didn't know the difference between there and their and who spelled super S-O-P-E-R.

"Are you sure it's not just a typo?" I asked.

"I wish," she said, scrolling to at least six other texts with the same misspelling. And that wasn't all — the dude spelled panda wrong.

Though poor spelling is forgivable in certain cases, there's nothing better than a grammatically correct, smartly punctuated, and uniquely worded love letter/email/text. Reading is the best way to absorb all those tricky grammatical rules — if you read enough, graceful communication will become second nature. Need proof? Check out this study by Berkeley scientists, or this one at LD OnLine, a resource for learning disabilities and ADHD.

5. It helps you relax.

What's your No. 1 de-stressing tactic? A glass of white wine? A two-hour yoga class? Deep-breathing? Your ocean screen-saver? Sex? A nighttime cup of chamomile? Destroying villains on your PlayStation 3? Binge-watching Grey's Anatomy?

That's all well and good. The more de-stress techniques the better. But according to neuropsychologists at the University of Sussex, reading a book blows all your other chillax strategies out of the water. A group of brave volunteers were subjected to tests designed to raise their heart rate and generally stress them out. Then scientists exposed them to a variety of common relaxation methods — a long walk, a cup of something warm to drink, video games, music, etc. Just six minutes of reading reduced their stress levels by 68 percent — that's leaps and bounds better than every other method they tried. Next time you need to unwind, turn off the TV and open a book. It even eases muscle tension.

6. It might make you better at MATH.

This research actually blew my mind. I thought reading was to blame for my universally crappy math grades. I used to hide Vonnegut novels in my Algebra II textbook and read for the entire class period. Divvying up a restaurant bill has given me a panic attack. But according to the Guardian, the British Cohort Study found that kids who read for pleasure have universally higher test scores than kids who don't, in all areas — including math. The increase was so significant it led the researchers to conclude that the way a kid reads has a bigger impact on test scores than whether his or her parents have a post-secondary degree. Crazy. Also, thanks, British Cohort Study. Now I have no excuse for the fact that math makes me want to cry.

7. It keeps your brain healthy and staves off Alzheimer's.

I recently read an unnerving article in the New York Times about how advances in medical science and better treatment for common killers like lung and heart disease are increasing life expectancies. That's not the scary part — the scary part is that longer life spans mean more people will suffer from Alzheimer's and cancer, two illnesses that afflict aged cells.

It's not too early to start reducing your Alzheimer's risk. Aside from a healthy lifestyle, one of the best things you can do to stay sharp is engage in brain-boosting activities. Reading is at the top of the list. In fact, a study published in Neurology suggests that vigorous mental activity — like reading — slows age-related cognitive decline.

8. Reading is a cheap way to expand your horizons.

Prisons, hospitals, waiting rooms — have you ever noticed that places where people get stuck are always well-stocked with reading material?

I grew up with a single mom in rural Northern Michigan, an hour and a half drive from the nearest shopping mall. But by the time I was 13, I'd been a student at Hogwarts, an adulterous wife stifled by my doctor husband, a South African orphan with a dream of becoming a boxing champion, and the daughter of a missionary in the Congo. No matter where you are, a book is a door that opens into another life. If you're a bored and lonely teenager, trapped in a dead-end town and surrounded by people who don't understand you, it's an escape hatch. If you're a curious adult, it's a chance to travel the world for no more than the price of a Kindle download or a paperback. Or hit up the library to globe-trot for free.

9. Because, you guys, IT IS FUN.

Don't let horrible memories of high school English class convince you that reading isn't fun. There's a really charming excerpt on Huffington Post from Wendy Lesser's Why I Read: The Serious Pleasure of Books, a conversational tour through her reading history that's also a reminder about the quiet joy of losing yourself in language.

"When it comes to literature, we are all groping in the dark, even the writer. Especially the writer. And that is a good thing — maybe one of the best things about literature. It's always an adventure of some kind. Even the second or third or tenth time you read it, a book can surprise you, and to discover a new writer you love is like discovering a country."

10. Because everyone has a thing for sexy librarians.

I am very, very nearsighted — so nearsighted that even the ultra high-index lenses in my glasses are coke-bottle thick. I'm kind of self-conscious about how small my eyes look when I wear my glasses, and as a result, I wasn't confident enough to wear them out in public until I turned 25 and reached the glorious fuck-it stage of life. The weird thing? With my glasses on, guys check me out more, and I am not one of those lucky freaks who look really good in goggles. Also, my glasses are HUGE. And yet I swear to you — if I wear my glasses to a bar, I'm way more likely to get hit on.

I consulted my dude friends about this phenomenon, and they unanimously agreed that glasses are sexy because glasses are associated with books, and books are associated with smart people, and smart brains are sexy. Works for me. It's kind of hard to definitively prove this one, but judging by the volume of steamy librarian porn out there, plus Tumblr accounts like Hot Guys Reading Books and its counterpart, Hot Girls Reading Books — I think it's safe to say that a lot of people find glasses-wearing, bookwormy smarty-pants pretty hot. There's even a dating site that matches people up according to their taste in literature. I bet you my nerdy firstborn that Alikewise creates longer-lasting matches than OkCupid.

11. It teaches you how to read minds.

A few months ago, the Internet was all aflutter about a study published by social psychologists at the New School who discovered that reading literary fiction improved people's ability to interpret social cues. Subjects who read literary fiction (authors like Alice Munro, Charles Dickens, and F. Scott Fitzgerald) for five to ten minutes demonstrated a higher ability to understand others' mental states.

Why is this important, and how will it help you be a kinder, more thoughtful and socially fluent version of yourself? Because the literary-fiction readers aced tests that measured Theory of Mind, defined by the researchers as the ability to understand others' mental states. Essentially, the study measured each subject's mind-reading skills. Could they pick up a flicker of sadness betrayed by a slow-to-bloom smile? Or realize that a coworker's noisy exhale means they've been talking about their cat for too long? After engaging in the kind of reading that demands attention and interpretation, people were significantly better at putting themselves in another's shoes. This gets back to what David Foster Wallace was saying in his speech.

12. Because being a sharp and prolific reader might help you land, and succeed, at your job.

There are a ton of scary articles out there about how low literacy rates contribute to things like early incarceration, unemployment, and even health problems. But the happy inverse of that problem is that high literacy is a skill that will benefit you in every aspect of your life — and particularly in the workplace, where the ability to communicate effectively is one of the top skills employers look for in new hires. Check out this list on Forbes.com — reading more will make you stronger in almost every area.

When you tackle a literary novel like David Copperfield, you're doing half the work — Charles Dickens provides the text, but your imagination provides the scene. In other words, you problem-solve. You anticipate. You infer things about characters based on details. You and the author, during the course of the book, are a team. So what are you waiting for? Go read. Your life will thank you by becoming even more awesome.

"If you want to really hurt you parents, and you don't have the nerve to be gay, the least you can do is go into the arts. I'm not kidding. The arts are not a way to make a living. They are a very human way of making life more bearable. Practicing an art, no matter how well or badly, is a way to make your soul grow, for heaven's sake. Sing in the shower. Dance to the radio. Tell stories. Write a poem to a friend, even a lousy poem. Do it as well as you possible can. You will get an enormous reward. You will have created something."

Art varies in its forms from ancient cave paintings to traditional landscape paintings. We have no trouble determining these things are works of art.

“In the beginning was the image. Words are images. A certain kind of images that tend strongly towards taking over all consciousness and call it REALITY. “
Asger Jorn

The curator of a Western art museum commissioned a local artist to paint a mural-sized painting of Custer's Last Thought. The artist was told to make it highly symbolic of Custer's mindset during the debacle at the Little Big Horn.

Deep in thought, the artist went to his studio. After many false starts, he proceeded to paint an enormous oil painting. Finally, after many months of work, the painting was unveiled for the curator.

In the foreground, a beautiful crystalline blue lake with a single fish leaping. Around the fish's head is a halo. In the background, the hills and meadows are covered with naked Native American couples copulating.

The curator is both disgusted and baffled by what he sees. In a rage he turns to the artist and asks, "what the hell has this got to do with Custer's Last Thought?"

The artist replied, "It's simple; Custer's last thought had to have been: Holy Mackerel! Where did all these fucking Indians come from?"

WHAT YOU ON ABOUT?

I painted her in oils because she had a face like a sardine.

We have discussed some possibilities about what is Art, from women in Art to market oriented paintings. Since art forms have evolved over time from traditional to more abstract works, a better question may be: Blah blah blah Art?
